

Design Decisions

I made these design decisions because I like simplicity and easy-to-navigate pages when I visit them. Obviously, I am sure I will make changes as I go along the process of making this website, but I like the idea of a navigation bar near the top of the page, and a Contact section at the bottom. I studied various portfolios from PW Alum for Module 2, and my favorite setup was the navigation bar at the top, or on the left side of the page. As of right now I have my blog at the top of the page, which will be clickable through the navigation bar, but I may end up putting a separate bar on the side of the page (similar to how the WRA 210 page is set up, with the twitter feed on the right), with specific entries a person could click on, instead of just re-directing to the page itself. For the portfolio, I would like to balance it between being merely a professional page, and being a personable. As important as being professional and straightforward is, I also believe it is important for future employers to see a more personal side, and I believe websites that do that tend to stand out from the others.
