Design Decisions

I chose the color scheme because I was inspired by the picture of the cloud that I used at the top of the page. I liked those colors, and when I actually put them on the page in Photoshop, it came out in a way I like. There was another color scheme that I liked more (the top one in my color palette, which was inspired by a picture of leaves in the fall), but when I tried it out in Photoshop, I could not get the combination to work in a way that I liked, which is when I moved on to the color scheme I have right now. If I find a way to make that first color scheme work, then I will definitely end up going with that one, because in my gut I know that's the one I like the most.

I chose the general setup because I thought it was the easiest in terms of navigation. For the fonts, I tried to use fonts that were similar in a certain way, but also had a good contrast, so they would not look repetitive. I didn't want too much repetition, but I also didn't want them to all be completely different and look messy (it's hard to balance that!).

I chose the image of the cloud for my header picture simply because I have always been interested in clouds, so it has a feeling that feels very "me", which I think is important to have on a page that functions for myself and displays my work and my personality to anyone visiting that page. It may change later, that specific image of the cloud, but I know that in some way, there will be a cloud image or feel on the website.
